Email is essential for working with clients and others	Use the proper e-mail address for work and for personal messages.	A full set of Email features is important for responding to Emails and keeping them organized	Important messages from clients and others need to be readily available from Matter and Contact records.		Communication is clearer with formatted messages	Templates allow for sending standard responses and messages fast	A system for automatically linking incoming Emails to Matters saves time and promotes organization			Importance	Most law firms create hourly and flat fee bills in addition to some other types.		Tracking non-billable time is useful for evaluating the profitability of different types of Matters.	Different rates may be agreed on for different clients and Matters.	Unbundled billing can be attractive to both clients and lawyers, setting fixed, predictable fees for defined services.	Both clients and law firms find payment by credit card efficient. Firms get paid faster.	Tedious, repetitive process to bill Matters one at a time, suitable only for very small practices with few clients	A list of unbilled Matters is needed for an efficient monthly billing cycle

					Importance	Billing from the calendar saves time by avoiding entering the same text twice.	Billing from e-mails can catch billable time that might be lost.	Billing from tasks can support fixed fees for defined services and avoid double entry.	Running a timer can catch billable time that often it lost.	Some clients require bills be submitted in LEDES or UTBMS formats.						Importance	Quick access to A/R information supports following up on unpaid bills and improves cash flow.	Client trust funds and retainers need to be tracked to comply with ethical rules.	Inclusion of standard accounting features may eliminate the need for another accounting program.	Save time by linking Matter expenses and receipts directly to banking and credit card records.	Be spared from the tedious data entry task for firm expenses.
